

What if the world had no borders?

The world was created as a whole; it is us humans who have created boundaries and separated people. I believe that if there had been no borders, we would have stayed united. There would have been no feeling of being superior as a country. There would not be wars in order to win over other nations. Dividing the world with borders has only created hatred among people and the desire to conquer all nations.

There might still exist people who would want to be on top, but the rest would be united. Dividing nations creates differences among people regarding which part of the world is better. This leads to oppression and destruction, loss of lives, and damage to nature due to wars.

Interference with nature brings destruction and chaos. By dividing nations, we are violating the gift given by nature. The world was never divided, and thus we shouldn't divide it either. Staying together and knowing each culture and religion brings peace and joy, and it is important to make peace with everyone. It comes more naturally, and staying united helps with that.

When the world is divided, it creates division in the minds of people as well, and it leads to wars and disruption. Thus, a world without borders would bring more peace.
