Beauty of monsoon

The scorching rays of the sun said goodbye
Monsoon is here to fill everyone's heart with joy.
The sky is grey, and the petals wet
And the little drops of waters are everyone's pet.
Lets rejoice the re-birth of monsoon
With the beautiful views of puddles resembling a lagoon.
But Alas! The kids are in a dismay
Oh rain, come again another day.
The farmers are dancing, for their crop quenched their thirst
They wish for good crop, but they thank god first.
The frogs are coming out to enjoy some rain
They wait for the rain to come back again.
Lets enjoy this season of monsoon with joy and pride
And dance in the rain with our family by our side.

COMPULSIONS

Are compulsions good, or are they bad?
Saying the latter makes many sad but favouring the former, makes the moral man mad.

Don't get me wrong, I will explain
What is it - a boon or bane?
Let me set it slim and straight,
today love is no different from hate,
Both stem out of thoughts, then dwindle like twigs,
to replace each other as one feels fit.
Let's be candid, it's a cloak after all to look after own's interests and all.

The morals shift as benefit rises, explaining why people are full of surprises.
we make oceans toxic and dive in vain,
so why complain about the pain?
As for compulsions, they will be there
But you are the only one to care.
If in your Control be this life can go beyond and see sunlight.
Mark my words -
there will be fear,
So break the shackles
till it disappears.

The Disguised Tear

A troubled person, with Stress and strife,
The tormenting pain one's struggling through,
It prickles more than a knife.
All therapies result in vain.
Torrential downpour, the right weather to sob,
To grieve. To mourn,
The sanity torn.
With all the feelings throb,
The tears carrying your sorrows,
Can be disguised by the rain.
Cry all your agony and pain.
The dampness in the air,
All the florae bent
As if urging you to cry
So that the trauma in your heart ends
After the rain as you stop sobbing,
Your heart's woe has finally deceased
Now you can feel the ache fainting
Like the nature your gaiety has been unleashed.
Sometimes, I wonder is this the way of nature,
To cry to shed their despair
And after the rain,
The spring rejoices,
These are the natural choices
But the cycle remains the same,
In the entire life game,
Crying is not a weakness,
But a weapon to kill your heart's heaviness,
After all of this you
And nature feels satisfactory bliss.

Rainy days

*The world was in beauty
Before it was the sleet
Everyone needs time
To lay back and retreat*

*Before the summer came
The flowers did bloom
But now its time to greet
The lovely, cool monsoon*

*It's a shower for the Earth
After the sun has shined
It reinvigorates the soul
And awakens the mind*

*The flowers dance gaily
The clouds send a drizzle
The wild wind sings in glee
The trees sway and bristle*

*The sky is cloudy & grey
The puddles on the lane
The rainbow over yonder
It's all thanks to the Rain*

BEAUTY OF MONSOON

The monsoon awakens nature and transforms the entire dry land into a beautiful colourful Picturesque Landscape. With lush green forests, beautiful valleys, and breath-taking waterfalls, India is a land of breath-taking natural beauty.

It has the ability to persuade many people to believe that it is a God-given benefit placed to man at a precise moment. We all love doing some things as it rains, such as staring out the window and thinking profoundly about life while listening to the pitter patter of raindrops.

Monsoon has its own ineffable delights, even if it is accompanied by irritants such as heat, perspiration, long traffic jams, and disturbance of everyday activities such as regular life. The aroma of parched soil after the first rain of the season, the thrill of night-time walks once the shower has subsided, the taste of crisp pakoras with a hot cup of tea, and the spirit of love melodies that wouldn't sound the same otherwise. But that's simply the way it is. The glass might be either half full or half empty.

During the monsoon season, it's not just rain and slippery roads. We are captivated by the monsoon's pure, natural splendour. The rainy season has the best of everything, whether you're at the beach or in the hills.

The monsoon season is a godsend for farmers all around the country and for agriculture. Farmers all around the country are looking forward to the monsoons since the rains during this season are critical for crop development. During the monsoon, the fields, crops, trees, and plants all come to life. Nature as a whole comes to life in a "sea of green" during the monsoons. Rainfall timing is critical since delayed monsoons can cause drought and agricultural damage. Despite the adoption of modern agricultural techniques, the monsoon rains serve as a reservoir for farmers and their fields, providing us with food. During the monsoon season, a vast variety of flowers, vegetables, and crops thrive.

The monsoon season has certain disadvantages. Natural disasters and accidents can sometimes turn this season's blessings into a burden. Droughts can occur on rare occasions when the monsoons fail to arrive on time. Crops suffer substantial damage as a result of the exceptionally heavy rain. Flooding occurs when a river overflows, causing major damage to land, crops, and fields as well as claiming life. During the monsoon season, many people lose their lives, homes, and means of support due to landslides in hilly areas. The monsoons wreak the most havoc on metropolis street residents. Flooding and heavy rains force destitute street dwellers to flee their houses. Numerous diseases, including cholera, typhoid, dysentery, and malaria, have been seen to afflict big populations.

Overall, the advantages of the monsoons exceed the disadvantages. The monsoons are a natural aspect of life on Earth. As a result, the coming of the monsoons heralds the start of a message of creation, and the aroma of rain in the air refreshes us after the searing and unyielding heat of summer.

Beauty of Monsoon

Every season is beautiful but Monsoon is the reason why other seasons are beautiful. Monsoon refers to the gracious bounty in the form of merciful rains. A monsoon season instills greenness in the planet. It is the only time when air freshens and pollution comes to an end. The scorching heat is given a break and the animal and insect life reverts to square one. It is a time when mother earth gives us the message of togetherness and hopefulness. Not only the trees regain their lives but also human beings learn purity, patience and selflessness from their mother, Planet Earth.

The nature is so splendid that it yolks happiness and forbearance in a cloud of rejoice. Birds chirrup in their euphoria and humans in their own ways. The farmers who are most dependent on the monsoons become jubilant with hope of a better future. For them Monsoon is their life redeemer. Monsoon is the only time when we see the hibernated elements coming to life. The rains flood our emotions and the next moment we are on cloud nine. It is an absolute pleasure to watch the water gushing from the hills and the crystal clear and diamond pure rains pouring from their heavier counterparts. It is a delight to watch the birds swinging flawlessly and other creatures slithering or running. A sense of satisfaction enables us to work better as well. A good monsoon season often builds a positive discerning approach to the economy, which leads to an increase in domestic and international consumption of goods, products and services.

Life in the monsoon season cannot just be expressed in words. It is our priceless possession and we must thank our beloved mother for that and because of her we are enjoying all the necessities and opulence of life.

Prajna Smita Mohapatra

It has been rightly said by John Updike, "Rain is grace; rain is the sky condescending to the earth; without rain, there would be no life." Monsoon holds a special place in everyone's heart. We all wait for the monsoon season eagerly throughout the year. It lasts from June to September in most parts of India. We wake up to the loud thunders and lightning streaks. Green leaves are full of dew drops. The first raindrop that touches the parched land gives a sense of relief to the farmers as well as the pluviophiles. Making paper boats, getting drenched in the rain, jumping on puddles are all a part of the sweet and vivid memories of our childhood. It can be considered a gift from nature as it gives us the much-needed respite from the sweltering summer. The sound of the rain is very calming and soothing. The soft and gentle breeze during the rainy season as well the smell of the wet mud alleviates our mood. The rain fills up the dry water bodies. Using different coloured umbrellas while going to school becomes a routine. People have their own set of anecdotes to narrate about the monsoons. The peacock flaunts its feathers which is a symbol of luck and beauty. The scrumptious potato fritters make our day. Therefore, the rainy season is celebrated in India just like any other festival and is welcomed with open arms and a lot of happiness.
