FROM INKSTROKES TO INTROSPECTION

Childhood

I hear my mother calling
Then I see someone running
It's the little old me
With the two usual ponies

I realise I miss my childhood
What a great fun it was
The scolding and the playing
All was so much fun

All the cartoons of the TV
Are now a fussing bore
I remember me being so funny
With all the silly jokes

I'll miss my childhood terribly
What a shame it can't return
All the fun goes there
And I can never take a U-Turn

By Avika Bhardwaj (VII-B)

Books, not looks!

Remember Mrs. Wormwood from the popular classic Matilda? The one who said “You chose books. I chose looks.” Yes, one of the most iconic dialogues in the book is the bitter reality of today’s times. For the past few centuries, we have defined beauty not by happiness, health, and personality but by physical appearance. The majority of people in today’s times judge each other -- and even themselves, sometimes -- based on how they look. The physical appearance of a person is a major contributing factor to the social status and popularity of a person. We are born with an eye for beauty, but our society nurtures that preference by rewarding attractiveness. And I think it’s a shame. Looks attract but fade, while personality keeps. When we meet someone for the first time, and make a judgment based on their external appearance, our judgment may be wrong. It is just like a wrapper on chocolate or a gift-wrap. Unless and until you don't remove the wrapper you cannot guess what is in the package. After consuming or using the product only then can you judge whether you have got true value for the product. A few encounters will enable us to understand the person. It's better to stay neutral until the moment when you can say for sure that you know this or that person well enough to say that they are a person who do or don't deserve faith, understanding and attention. So never judge people by appearances, because appearances can be deceptive. Some of the decent-looking people behave in an odd way, while some others unseen, behave very well. Therefore, it is not possible to judge a person by his/her external looks. George Bernard Shaw and Shakespeare were not perceived to be handsome. But their writings have portrayed their high intellect. The great writer Helen Keller may not have been considered a beautiful lady. She was deprived of sight, hearing impaired, unable to speak when she was just a two-year-old child. But fighting all odds, she had become a celebrity author! Contrary to this, Walt Disney was not only handsome but had an international reputation by his steadfast work, devotion, and dedication. Imagine a situation where a posh black SUV arrives, and a handsome man dressed in a suit with polished shoes gets out of the car. The first immediate impression? This man is a rich, successful businessman and can be trusted. But, what if he turns out to be nothing more than a cheat and liar? Your ideas and thoughts about a person or object should not be based on what you see, usually things like how the person or object looks physically, what they wear, what they act like, etc. Something can be very different inside than it is on the outside. Often we base our ideas on something when we first see it. Like if one fruit looks more undamaged or fresh than another, most people would immediately think that the better-looking fruit is the better fruit, even if inside, the good-looking fruit has a fruit worm. A person may look lazy but can work very hard and with efficacy when motivated. I would like to conclude by saying “Sometimes people are beautiful. Not in looks. Not in what they say. Just in what they are.”

The Little Things In Life

Too often in life we don't realise
What we have until it's lost
Too often we wait too late to say
"I am sorry, I was wrong"
Sometimes it seems we hurt the ones
We hold the dearest in our heart
And we allow stupid things
To tear our lives apart
For too many times we let Unimportant things get to our mind
And by then, its usually too late
To see what made us blind
So be sure that you let people know
How much they mean to you
Take the time to say the words
Before the time is through
Be sure that you appreciate
Everything you've got
And be thankful for the little things
In life that means a lot

By Mehar Kapoor (X-C)

Starry Night

All day long I wait for you to come out,
Whether I'm busy or playing on the roundabout,
Then, all of a sudden, the Sun goes down,
And you all appear, wearing your shiny little crowns.

It's dark outside... and lonely, but I still come to see you,
My only friends, you sparkle bright, with a soft, argentine hue.

Millions of you twinkle like diamonds in the sky,
Listening to my secrets, without any reproving cries.

When the clouds cover you with their eiderdown,
I feel so lonesome, like a misfit in a crowd,
It's like I'm being punished for some terrible sin,
And I'm left feeling as restless as I've ever been.
